

High-skilled migration and economic growth

Ko Shakuno*

Abstract

This paper examines the effect of public education expenditure on the long-run economic growth rate in developing countries. Individuals in the adulthood period decide whether they emigrate to developed countries or not. This paper find that public education expenditure has two conflict effects on the long-run economic growth in developing countries.

Keywords Public education, Economic growth, Human capital, Migration

JEL-Classification I22, F22, O11

*Graduate School of Economic and Management, Tohoku University, 27-1 Kawauchi, Aoba-ku, Sendai-shi 980-8576, Japan. E-mail address: b4ed1002@s.tohoku.ac.jp