

A general model of choice overload

We consider a general model of choice overload where DM may fail to perceive either preference nor menus. In line with the idea that larger sets bring higher level of complexity thus render DM less likely to choose accurately, we impose nestedness/contraction property on both menu-dependent preferences and the consideration filter. Characterization and numerical representation are provided.

Keywords: bounded rationality, choice overload, revealed preference