Locally optimal choice

This note considers a non-standard choice model where Decision Maker (DM) settles for locally optimal alternatives instead of searching for the global optimal alternative. We model localness by betweenness mapping and an alternative is locally optimal if for all superior and feasible alternatives there exists an inferior and feasible alternative lies in between them. We provide characterization of such choice procedure by recovering preference and betweenness mapping from choice data.