

Population Aging, Human Capital Accumulation, and Endogenous Public Policy

Makoto Hirono

Abstract

We construct an overlapping generations model in which government chooses the tax rate that determines publicly provided education and medical care. The tax of education increases human capital accumulation and that of medical care improves the life expectancy. Our findings leads to existence of multiple equilibria: low, meddle, high medical care.